

seawater, which tend to be either conservative or nutrient-like, follows.

The final chapter covers three topics in global change: first, the carbon cycle, CO₂, and the greenhouse effect; second, the sulfur cycle, atmospheric sulfur pollution, and its effects on atmospheric acidity and on climate; and third, chlorofluorocarbons and ozone.

Since this book is intended as a text, it might benefit from some problems and/or review questions at the end of the chapters. An Introduction to Environmental Chemistry overlaps to some extent an earlier text written by several of the authors (Raiswell et al. 1980) but is greatly expanded and more oriented toward anthropogenic problems.—Elizabeth K. Berner.

Elizabeth K. Berner is a research affiliate in the Department of Geology and Geophysics at Yale University, New Haven, Connecticut.
